The White House,

Washington, Nov. 9, 1908. My dear Professor Bailey: I wish at the outset cordially to thank you for the way in which you have taken hold of the work you are doing. No more valuable work for the people of this country can be done, because no more valuable work for the farmers of this country can be done.

Now of course the whole success of he work depends upon the attitude of the people in the open country, of the farming people of the United States. If they feel an awakening interest in what you are doing, they should manifest it. Moreover, it is essential that the farmers, the men who actually live on the last week, superintending the repairs soil, should feel a sense of ownership in on the court house, returned to his this commission, should feel that you home in West Topsham, Saturday. gentlemen in very truth represent them and are responsible to their desires and are only for the corporate limits, and wishes, no less than to their needs. WOOD STILL LEADS.

As Material in Building Construction is Latest Report.

Great as the advance in fire-proof onstruction has been during the last en years there has been no let-up in ent on wood today that they are compelled to admit that the forests of the country are likely to be the chief source of builing material for many years to come.

"The use of cement, away with wood entirely," is a remark often heard, and, indeed, when one stands on lower Broadway and looks get into the closest possible touch with up at the towering skyserapers, the statement seems to contain much truth. As a matter of fact, however, the popular idea that fire-proof materials will do away with the need of using lumber in a comparatively few years is a very eroneous one. All of the various fire-proof materials going into the approved construction of the more sub stantial buildings are used in greater quantities now than the world dreamed of a few years ago, yet the heavy de-mand for lumber continues. .

That wood predominates is shown by the annual building records. Of the permits used for buildings erected last year, approximately 61 per cent. were constructed of wood, and the remaining 39 per cent of fire resisting material, according to a report issued by the geological survey on operations in forty-nine leading cities of the country. These figures are the more significent when it is realized that they only represent the building activities in the resent the building activities in the largest cities; they do not take into account the construction of dwellings, stores and other buildings in the thousends of small cities and towns scattered over and not included in the forty-nine cities on which the reckening is made.

In towns and small cities wood is usually the predominating building ma-terial and it is safe to say that if the statistics had included figures for all of whatever size, the percentage of wooden construction would have been much greater. These figures, as a rule very large amounts to be added. The cost, also, is relatively higher in these cities than in towns nearer the base
